Australian by birth, a granddaughter of the conductor Albert Coates, Tanya studied with Jacqueline du Pre and Janos Starker and played in various UK orchestras before settling in 1986 with her family in Edmonton, where she was professor at the University of Alberta and conductor of the University Orchestra.

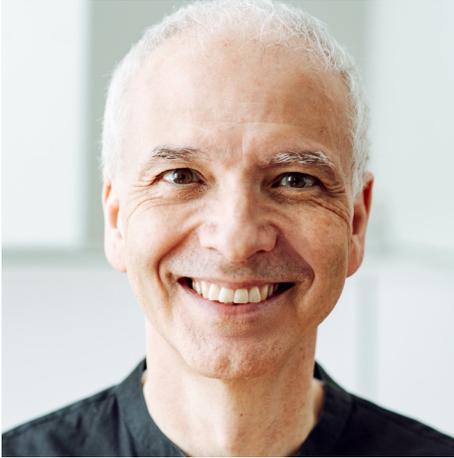

Tanya was a devoted and tireless teacher who guided many students to careers in cello. And as a cellist, Tanya was known for her musical passion and her insistence that every performance should be of the highest integrity and quality. “Each one of us is a maestro”, she believed. She inspired her students and colleagues to engage with the freedom of the human spirit, be bold and to do anything.

From ESO Cellist Ronda Metszies:

“Tanya was a hugely influential teacher for me. Her approach to technique was full of inquiry and exploration, and she constantly challenged her students to take risks and to push past our perceived limitations. All of this was in devoted service to the music we explored together, in an unending and uncompromising search for the greatest possible range of musical expression. She was an utter inspiration!”

Four times, Tanya joined a quartet on a musical paddling tour down the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon on a raft, her cello in a waterproof case. The group set up in natural rocky amphitheatres to play their concerts. Afterwards Tanya liked to hike through the cliffs in the heat, then shed her clothes and jump into cold pools – this typified her adventurous spirit and bold love of life.
